Some construction projects in Toronto are still being completed more than two years later. For example, the new York Mills subdivision is still incomplete, and more than two years after the first buyer moved in, there's no new home sales to speak of. The condo project, located at 50 Boulevard Ave., at York Mills Rd., is the first completed development in Thorncliffe Park, according to the plan sponsor. The $37 million development consists of 336 units, some of which have sold, according to the company that marketed the units. It has been two years since the first five blocks of the development were sold. The largest unit is 1,700 square feet. "We're really excited about the building and the people who are moving in," said Megie MacQuitty, sales and marketing director for the project. She said the project initially attracted strong interest, but the recession soon stalled the sale of units. "We did get a really good first buyer, and it didn't take long for them to decide on it, and they decided to go the buyer-seller option," MacQuitty said. The first buyers, who moved into their units in 2011, are no longer there, MacQuitty said. After that, there were two sales to follow. "We're just waiting and waiting for someone to be ready to get on board. We're not pressuring anything," MacQuitty said. The current market in Thorncliffe Park is tough, according to Reg Hartnett, president of Hartnett Developments. He said the market in the subdivision has never been better. But he said it's taking longer than usual to sell units, and the sales price is lower. "I can say that to date, 2014, the market in Thorncliffe Park has never been this bad," Hartnett
